Smaller sites on Google Hotel Ads

Several small sites cheaper by a similar margin usually means a wholesale rate is being resold in public.

GoSeek 1,714 stays, 22% · HutchGo 1,568 stays, 20% · Evendo 1,247 stays, 24% · Bluepillow 872 stays, 23.5% · Klook 850 stays, 23%

Key takeaways

1 Close the wholesale leak

For the hotel's revenue team: GoSeek, HutchGo, Evendo and other small sites were 20–24% below direct. Find which wholesale contract holds that rate and close it.

2 Then Trip.com and Agoda

For the hotel's revenue team: Trip.com got worse, cheaper on 81% of Google Hotel Ads stays and 26% of booking engine searches. Agoda is still cheaper on 57%. Raise parity with both.

3 Agree a target before adding budget

For the hotel's revenue team, with Triptease: Metasearch spend rose seven times and the return fell from 9.4x to 1.2x. Ask what changed in bidding and agree a target return first.

4 Fix or rethink Retargeting

For Triptease: it used only 4–5% of its budget in September and October and won no October bookings. Fix it, or the hotel moves the budget.

5 Read branded search carefully

Its 8x return comes from four bookings by guests who already know the hotel, after none in September. Contents Pop will track it monthly before drawing conclusions.

Notes on the data

- October Metasearch visibility (impression share and outbid share) was not in the Triptease export, so we cannot yet tell whether bids or rates held Metasearch back.
- Traveloka was not in October's Google Hotel Ads comparison (cheaper on 75% of stays in September). On its own site it was cheaper on 1 of 146 searches.
- Not reported for October: typical baht gaps by OTA and the overall booking engine gap. With nine bookings, returns by channel can swing widely month to month.
- Recorded prices, not live prices. Budgets are set in US dollars, so baht budgets move slightly with the exchange rate.
